

Location

1. Don't worry if you like a program and rotate there early. You can always There are relatively few locations in each branch where you can match, know where they all are to facilitate your decision.
2. You will only get to rotate at a maximum of up to two different military rotations (unless you pay and do a third rotation as a civilian).
3. Select rotation locations either because you want to see what being in the area is really like, or because you absolutely know you want to go to a certain place.
4. Living at the location for 4 weeks is an audition for what things will be like during residency.
5. If you are 100% sure you know where and what you want to match into, and you are 100% sure you will get a spot there...then there is nothing wrong with selecting an easy rotation at a cool location just to have a vacation.
6. Another strategy is to do your locations at the places that are the most expensive to get to by plane, or the most difficult to access. Then, you can always try and visit the other more accessible programs before interviewing is complete.
